Acknowledgements

Without the kind cooperation of all interviewees in Amsterdam and Berlin, I would have had nothing to write a book about, so I want to thank them before anyone else. Furthermore, I want to express my gratitude to the Institute for Migration and Ethnic Studies and the Duitsland Instituut Amsterdam for the financial and logistical facilitation of my PhD-project. The Wissenschaftszentrum Berlin für Sozialforschung offered me a workplace for the period of data collection in Berlin.

I would like to thank all three of my promoters for taking a chance on appointing someone with a background in psychology for a project in the field of political sciences. I am glad you gave me the chance to combine the best of both worlds in this book. During the years, Meindert kept telling me that I should not let the best become the enemy of the good. Ton kept a discreet distance but nevertheless showed to be involved, and his comments reminded me of the bigger picture whenever I threatened to lose myself in details. Despite the fact that, officially, he was ‘only’ my co-promoter, Jean has fulfilled his role like no other. I thank you for your encouragements at times I did not see any way ahead. Your firm belief in my book helped me to recognize the progress I was making and that there would come an end to it one day. But now that I finished it, and we will not be having our 15-minutes meetings any longer, who will impress on me to ‘take the compliment’ and ‘let go of the cynicism’?

I would like to thank my (former) colleagues Floris, Boris, and Maria Be. for allowing me to use the archival data that they collected. Fenella assisted me during her internship with the interviews in Amsterdam and Wiebke and Fien were of great help carrying out the Big World Experiment. Also, I’d like to thank Fred for designing the cover of this book.

Over the years, I have shared my office with nice colleagues. I would like to thank Simone and Annemarie with whom I could share the burden of being a PhD student, attempted to improve the social integration of our institute, organize the best outing ever, and have fun outside office hours. Also, the company of Marloes, Daniëlle, María V., and Maria del Mar prevented that I lost myself in the lonely existence of a doctoral student. For the same reason, I would like to thank my fellow participants of the Graduiertenkolleg for the enjoyable drinks after complicated discussions in German. Furthermore, I would like to thank Blanca and María Br. It was really nice to share the highlights and low points in the final phases of our PhD trajectories. Your comments on my chapters and your moral support helped me to pass the final hurdles. I hope to enjoy your friendship for many more years, even across borders.

Also outside the work environment, there are people I would like thank for their interest in my work, their friendship and support, and the good times spent. I am glad that the hours of chatting with the Tutton, the full evening's dinner parties with my  $\Psi$ -friends and their lovely ladies, the New Year's parties with Sanne, the celebrations of Leidens Ontzet, and all nice things I did with other friends and family, took my mind off my work when I needed distraction. You are very much appreciated!

Fien, thanks for all the moral support and the many cups of espresso we drank in the CC. I will miss them, but I am sure we will find another way to see each other often enough. Just know that I am very happy to have my sister living in the same city as I. Thank you, Harry and Arda, for your interest in my work, your critical comments on my chapters and summary, your believe in me, and for everything else. You are the best.

Last but not least, I thank Geert. If I would not have started this Ph.D., I'd never have met you. But if it weren't for you, I probably would never have finished it. I am most grateful to you for all the time and energy you invested in my work, and in me. You endured me when I was at rock-bottom and helped me on my way up. Thank you so very much. I could not have done it without you.
