

Downloaded from UvA-DARE, the institutional repository of the University of Amsterdam (UvA)
<http://hdl.handle.net/11245/2.50543>

File ID uvapub:50543
Filename English Summary
Version unknown

SOURCE (OR PART OF THE FOLLOWING SOURCE):

Type PhD thesis
Title Constructing history, culture and inequality : the Betsileo in the extreme
 Southern Highlands of Madagascar
Author(s) S. Evers
Faculty FMG: Amsterdam Institute for Social Science Research (AISSR)
Year 2001

FULL BIBLIOGRAPHIC DETAILS:

<http://hdl.handle.net/11245/1.307220>

Copyright

It is not permitted to download or to forward/distribute the text or part of it without the consent of the author(s) and/or copyright holder(s), other than for strictly personal, individual use, unless the work is under an open content licence (like Creative Commons).

English Summary

This thesis is the product of ten years research and field work (1989-1999). It is entitled:

Constructing History, Culture and Inequality:
The Betsileo in the Extreme Southern Highlands of Madagascar

The study focuses on the Betsileo village of Marovato and its surrounding region, located in the south of Fianarantsoa province. The choice of setting was derived from archival research on the Malagasy history of slavery in the Archives d'Outre Mer (Aix-en-Provence). The archives indicated that the region was a no-man's-land, where runaway slaves and, at a later stage, ex-slaves were the principal settlers. Beyond this affirmation, virtually no information existed. My initial purpose then, was to determine who currently inhabited the region.

As it was the first time that the Marovato region was studied, I adopted an inductive, empirical approach to my research. The settlement of the region dates from the beginning of the twentieth century and the creation of Marovato only from the 1930s. This provided me with the opportunity to study the origins and development of the hierarchical society that Marovato is today.

During the early months of my research, my principal source of information was the ruling group of the village, who had succeeded in implanting their myth of themselves as tompon-tany, or "masters of the land" despite probable slave origins. Through the tompon-tany, I learned that the underpinnings of both their material and spiritual existence were comprised of three interdependent components: tombs, kinship and ancestors. This trilogy contains the essence of what "history" (tantara) is for the tompon-tany.

The first part of my research then, consisted in becoming acquainted with this history, while learning the rudiments of daily life in Marovato, or as it was expressed by the villagers, learning to "behave like a Betsileo". During this apprenticeship, I encountered a sub-group of Betsileo living in the Western periphery of Marovato. These people were called andevo ("slave", "slaves descent") and "impure people". The tompon-tany spoke of these andevo as "people without history", as they were supposed to have no tombs, ancestors or kinship groups.

From valuable counterpoint to the tompon-tany view of history and culture, these tombless people became the central aim of my study. During this process, I developed a theoretical concept called "andevoness". The theory of "andevoness" comprises features specific to the ontology of the andevo and postulates that they reflect a negative mirror image of the tompon-tany.