To acknowledge the help of others is always important, but in a dissertation discussing the importance of credit-giving it is perhaps even more so. As someone who tends to retreat into solitude when the going gets tough, I have not made it particularly easy for others to be of assistance. However, several colleagues have managed to do so anyway, by giving suggestions for literature and engaging in clarifying discussions on my research. In this regard, I want to mention Monika Röther, Melanie Schiller, David Nieborg, Laura Schuster, Carolyn Birdsall, and Jennifer Steetskamp. I would like to thank Martijn de Waal for granting me permanent access to his prodigious collection of relevant books.

Drafts and early versions of my writing were discussed in sound scholar meetings in Maastricht, and during the open peer review sessions that preceded the publishing of the book Sound Souvenirs: Audio Technologies, Memory, and Cultural Practices (Bijsterveld & van Dijck 2009). I want to thank Ruth Benschop, Wiebe Bijker, Jonathan Sterne, Micheal Bull, Trevor Pinch, Timothy D. Taylor, Susan Schmidt Horning, Hans-Joachim Braun, Andreas Fickers, Heike Weber, and Annelies Jacobs for their supportive, yet sharp commentary.

I would like to express my gratitude to the DJs interviewed for their time and candor. Also, I would like to thank three people who have been very active in helping me come into contact with DJs. They are Ruth Wolters, Jochem Verdonk, and Maurice Langenhoff.

I thank the Netherlands Organization for Scientific Research (NWO) for funding the project "Sound Technologies and Cultural Practices" of which my own research has been a part. Many thanks go to my supervisors José van Dijck and Karin Bijsterveld for their expert guidance throughout this difficult project. Their discerning commentary and their firm belief in a positive result were essential to the completion of this dissertation.

I would also like to thank my friends, my parents, and my sisters for their support and their patience. To my paranymphs Melanie Schiller and Sophie Prins, who will stand at my side as I defend the study below, go many thanks in advance. Finally, I want to thank my girlfriend Alyanne de Haan for doing the DTP on this text, and for keeping an eye on my health and sanity, but above all for love. Thank you.
