I want to thank first of all my advisor Veit Bader for his prompt and incisive commentary as well as his encouragements. His work has moreover been a model for me throughout the process of writing this thesis. Admittedly, the result ended up looking quite a bit different from the model, but I like to think that this is due mainly to the nature of my subject matter. I want to thank Geoffrey Levey for the opportunity to present parts of this thesis at the workshop ‘Authenticity, Autonomy and Culture’, and Joel Anderson, Alison Dundes Renteln and Beate Rössler for their thoughtful comments on that occasion. Jan Hein Furnée, Jaap den Hollander and Homme Wedman commented constructively on my work when it was in its early stages, while John Christman, Tabe Bergman, Agnes Nairn and Jan Bransen did so when it was almost finished. I also want to thank Georg Toepfer and Catrin Misselhorn for granting me access to their seminars at Humboldt University on, respectively, culture and evolution and political liberalism. I benefited in many ways from discussions with them and other participants of the seminar. Furthermore, Eva Walther and Jaap van Ginneken generously sent me drafts of their work, while Dorothee Horstkötter kindly sent me her PhD thesis. I am grateful also to Hans Wubs for designing the wonderful cover and for doing the lay out. I would not have been able to write this thesis without the fellowship granted to me by ASCA. I thank its staff, and Eloë Kingma in particular, for the trust they placed in me. Privately, I received special support from my roommate in Berlin, Florian Noto, my good friend Wybo Wiersma and my parents.
