In 2007, De Nederlandsche Bank (DNB) and the University of Amsterdam (UvA) gave me the opportunity to start writing this PhD thesis. It has been a unique experience that allowed me to learn from economists in the worlds of academia and policy making. Swapping one world for the other required only a five minute bike ride.

I've learned that doing research can be a tough and absorbing job. But in the process, I have received invaluable guidance from my supervisor, Wouter den Haan. I am extremely grateful for the numerous times he gave me advice, for encouraging me to become a PhD student, for his patience, his impatience, and for making me see the beauty of macroeconomics.

At DNB, I have been given nearly complete freedom in choosing my research topics, as well as the generous opportunity to visit the Federal Reserve Bank of New York for four months. I have enjoyed the company of my colleagues at DNB and benefited from their advice, especially from Wilko Bolt, Peter van Els, Gabriele Galati, David-Jan Jansen, Pierre Lafourcade and John Lewis.

I also want to thank everybody in the “MInt” group at the UvA. In particular, I am grateful to Pontus Rendahl and Christian Stoltenberg, for their advice about life during and after the PhD. I had great fun drinking Friday night beers with them, Alex, Arturo, Joris, Markus, Matija, Naomi, Petr, Philip, Siert, Tim, Ward, Wouter and many others. Thanks guys!

I'm proud to continue my career at University College London, which would not have been possible without the support of Marco Del Negro, Jakob de Haan, Matteo Iacoviello and especially my advisor Wouter.

Finally, I want to thank the people who kept me grounded in the real world: my parents Wim en Nelleke, my sister Rosanne, her husband Kees, my friends, in particular Ilona, Jasper, Paul, Tom, and Wendy, and of course my love François.
